

Notes of a Discussion
With W. A. Moore
December 14, 1978

I briefly touched base with W.A. Moore, General Manager of Giant Yellowknife Mines, to see what he thought was needed for northern mineral development. The points he made were:

1. He feels the most important thing is to have government indicate that they want mineral development and for what reasons.
2. That we should be looking at the development of the Northwest Territories and we should ask ourselves whether it's good for Canada and whether it's good for the Northwest Territories. If the answer is yes, then we should look at land claims, environment, and other aspects with more common sense.
3. You could get into the details on the negative aspects, eg. effects on environment and natives, etc.
4. He made a point about necessity of improving access to the Northwest Territories through such things as a bridge across the Mackenzie River.

D. J. Emery

/vb